The concept of this final outcome is 'surreal', black and white always gives me an elegant and solemn feel, but when I took these pictures, they reminded me of mime artist, comical and preposterous.

In the photo, the taxis were having sex, and the three white billboards were traffic lights before, and the gaming board was a building, I erase lots of windows and replace the scene. When I took this photo, I was caught by the car which was printed 1936, and I thought that could be an interesting object of my theme, and this is what I found:
Events from the year 1936 in the United Kingdom.
This year is notable for the death of George V early in the year, the accession of his son Edward VIII to the throne and his subsequent abdication, resulting in the accession to the throne of his younger brother George VI (previously Albert, Duke of York).

I was not sure that I could convey my idea through this picture, therefore I invited my roommate helped me to check this picture and without telling her what I was thinking about, and she told me she felt this picture was surreal, at that time I recognised it worked! For the next time, I would try to add one colour in a b&w photo to highlight.
